MIDGARD THEROPOD

HABITAT

I mostly enjoy eating meat but my diet includes some plants as well. I lay eggs to reproduce and my young stay with me until they are grown in a loose family unit. I keep to a territory which I share with some other trusted theropod families.

DID YOU KNOW?

Theropod hides are notoriously thick. That makes them tough opponents but extremely good mounts. The great majority of foes you face will be unable to damage your saurian steed and riding one will also make your legs invulnerable. Very few enemies can slow you down!

FUN FACTS!

Theropods can't be hurt by many things! Their bodies are strong and things that normally damage people won't hurt a saurian steed. Sadly that can also make them hard to care for. If your theropod becomes hurt, normal healing herbs or magic won't help very much. You'll need something stronger.

MIDGARD THEROPOD

HEROPOD FOOT REPLICA

Theropod means "beast footed". You might think that I only have three toes but theropods have five! Three are obvious and pointing forward, but one other toe points backwards and the final toe is reduced to be much smaller.

DID YOU KNOW?

Theropods have a well developed natural immunity to venoms and poisons. Their blood is not affected by these maladies the way humans are. If you're riding a saurian steed your legs gain this strength too! You can shrug off any leg hits containing poison or venom.

FUN FACTS!

A theropod has amazing strength which allows it to traverse areas and obstacles that would otherwise be impossible for any other kind of bipedal creature to cross. Being atop a saurian steed empowers it's rider to smash through some barriers that they would in no way be able to cross on their own.

MIDGARD THEROPOD

BONE STRUCTURE

While I am extremely strong, my bones are distinct because they are thin-walled and hollow. This is not a weakness, however. This hollow construction contributes to my mobility, speed, and most of all my ability to jump great heights.

DID YOU KNOW?

Theropods are great jumpers! Their method of taking down prey often relies on their ability to jump on their backs, sometimes as a group, and attack the vulnerable back of the neck of their victims. Riding a saurian steed lets you take advantage of this jumping power!

FUN FACTS!

Theropods have an innate ability to resonate with the magic that lies within Midgard! Because of the land's connection to it's patron, the Asir Tychasaurus, it's possible to harness these energies through both runes and rituals to imbue a saurian steed with powers that come directly from the gods.
